Swann House, site
Port Tobacco

probably 18th century

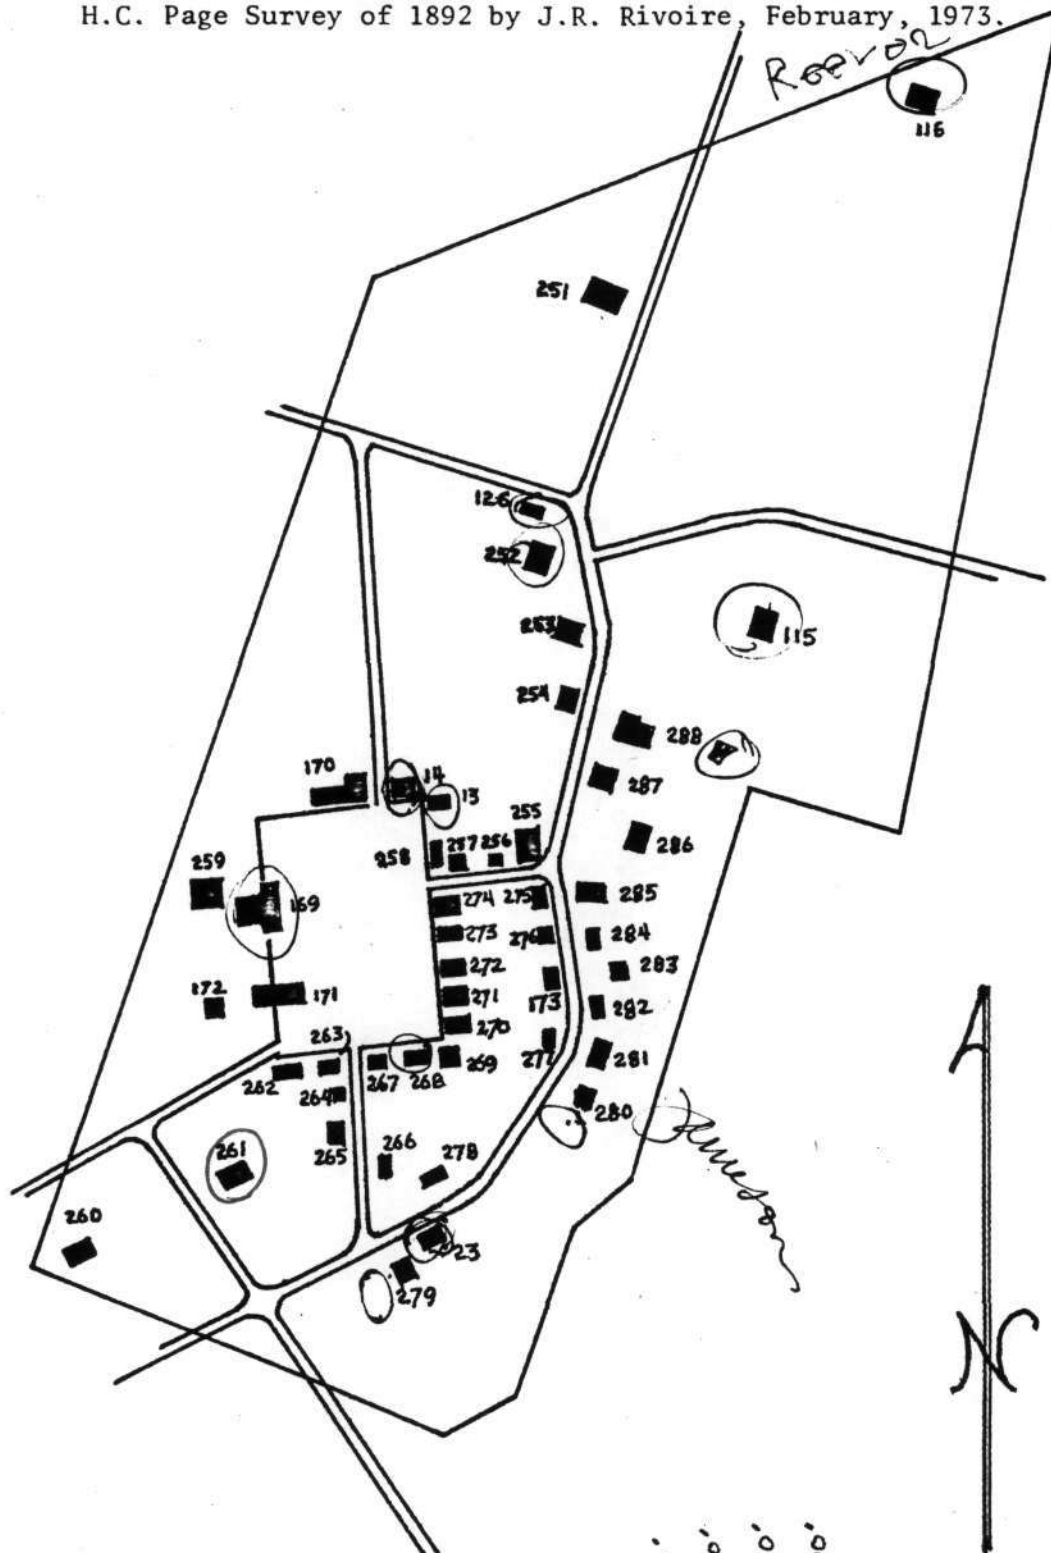

This small but architecturally intriguing frame dwelling with quarried stone foundations faced north and was of one-story height. The three-bay facade featured a centered door, and a single exterior chimney with flanking pents stood at the west end. Of brick construction, the chimney and pents extended the full width of that elevation. The raised foundations enclosed a full cellar. A later shed addition stood on the south side.
